Courageous Prayer

Well, we are about to finish another year of life. As I write this, Christmas is almost upon us, and another year is staring us right in the face. A new year is exciting in many ways - a chance to start over, a chance to reengage, a chance to finally do the things we have been saying for years that we need to do. However, for many of us, the new year will also require a bit of fortitude and courage.

The same exciting opportunities can quickly become challenging obstacles. The same New Year that offers the opportunity to lose some excess weight is the same New Year that requires the difficult, disciplined decision to actually do the work necessary to lose it. Now, your New Year’s opportunity may have nothing to do with weight, but whatever opportunities for change are available will always be followed by the challenge of implementing the behaviors that make that change possible. All of this is beginning to sound like weigh too much work (pun intended). I’m starting to think I might just wait another year to move from the opportunity stage to the implementation stage.

If meaningful change is actually going to happen, it will require the courage to get it done. Courage is a key component in refusing to put off for another year what needs to be done now. Some of us may feel a bit like the Lion in The Wizard of Oz, who believed he lacked the courage to face what was before him. Courage is not the absence of fear; it is the decision to move forward and act in spite of fear and doubt. Anyone who has truly demonstrated courage will tell you that fear was present—but it did not have the final word.

Aurelia and I are blessed with four grandchildren. About a year ago, my oldest son shared a story with me about something Judah, our oldest grandson, said during a family prayer time. As part of their family devotions, they were praying for missionaries from their church who were preparing to serve in a faraway and difficult country. As my five-year-old grandson began to pray, he said something like, “Lord, I would be afraid if you sent me to go to a faraway country. But if you do send me, give me the courage to go.”

When that story was shared with me, I couldn’t help but get a bit choked up. That little man understood enough to know that obedience to Jesus can be scary at times. His innocence and honesty were not masked by sanctimonious spiritual jargon, as many of us adults might be tempted to use. Instead, he openly admitted his fear - but he didn’t stop there. He also recognized that God is able to provide exactly what is needed in fearful moments and to infuse courage to obey. His prayer was not that God would refrain from sending him, but that if God did send him, He would provide the courage necessary to obey.

As we face a new year, our greatest struggles will not ultimately be with weight, debt, or any other challenge - formidable as those may be. Our greatest struggle will always be whether or not we choose to obey the Lord as He leads in our lives. God told Joshua in Joshua 1:9 (NAS), “Be strong and courageous! Do not tremble or be dismayed, for the Lord your God is with you wherever you go.” The God who called Joshua to lead was the same God who promised to provide the courage needed to carry out that calling.

My prayer for our churches as we enter 2026 is that we will acknowledge our fears but refuse to be led by them. May Judah’s prayer for courage become our prayer of trust in the God who leads us into the New Year. Let us not allow fear of the unknown to keep us from embracing the courage that comes from the One who knows all. Like many things in life, this is far easier to preach than to live - but God calls us to do both.

Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year!
